

Paul Vick Architects have won Finance Monthly's Game Changers Awards 2018. They were recently interviewed for FM's Ask an Expert.

The questions were:

- What are the biggest challenges facing development?
- What are the key issues clients face in relation to UK regulations and what are the incentives to encourage foreign participation?
- What examples of value enhancement can you give?
- What is your overall vision?

Paul Vick said: "Our job at Paul Vick Architects is to confront uncertainty and negotiate remaining unknowns and trends intelligently in relation to the client's brief. At the same time, we approach value from the start to enhance your business plans. The model we have developed addresses economic, use, identity, community, environmental and cultural values together to give opportunities for multiple users and positive feedback loops for your benefit.

"For an office owner-occupier, that might mean design that attracts the best staff, encourages them to stay longer, work more productively and, ultimately, to make a more profitable enterprise. For investor-developers, that might mean private rented housing designed with a marketing cachet for cultural and social opportunities that commands premium rents, long leases and zero voids. For a museum, it might mean spectacular staging in and outside galleries themselves to create a destination powerful enough to attract people away from their screens."
