This year's IPAX 2019, the property event linked to the International Property Awards, is taking place in London next week. This international exhibition attracts prominent property professionals from around the world and is a prime place to do business, with nearly 200 decision makers in European architecture registered to attend.

This year, international juror Paul Vick, Fellow of the Royal Society of Arts and Founder of Paul Vick Architects, is a keynote speaker, discussing his approach to innovation and increased value which takes into account invisible structures (such as user need and desire, and the client's business model) and visible opportunities to give clients market and cultural edge. This has resulted in the practice's 100% planning permission for new and historic buildings which is fundamental to giving Clients confidence that their ideas will be achieved and increases asset value. Paul Vick will present the practice's approach using case study material that includes: a new model for a low energy, 1st age to 3rd age home, a 20 acre regeneration scheme in UK incorporating a mix of uses of offices, low energy homes, retail, 80 room care home and boutique hotel, and newly completed glass bridge.

The practice's vision has won the firm multiple awards for its outstanding contribution to economically and environmentally sustainable architecture, including Most Innovative Architecture Firm London two years in a row in 2018 and 2019, and Best Cultural Architecture Practice in the UK this year as well.

Head to the Savoy Hotel on 2nd December to hear Paul talk about some of his firm's 100 plus projects and find out how a building can actually help you live longer. Exciting times in the world of architecture!
